

PERSONAL PHILOSOPHY

I consider my sub-speciality as one of the most complex surgical specialities, where good knowledge, advanced surgical skills, hard work, dedication and enthusiasm are a must to achieve excellent outcome and to deliver a high standard of care. However, I believe that good communication, empathy and mutual trust and respect between me and my patients are the essential pillars to reach clinical excellence and improve patient's experience.

I have a strong academic interest and have published a large number of scientific papers, book chapters, scientific reviews and abstracts. I strongly feel that every clinician is ethically and professionally expected to participate to the development of evidence based medicine through clinical and experiment research. I will always offer my patients the best treatment based on the strongest scientific evidence on which I am continuously updated.

I believe that the best surgical procedure is the right procedure, for the right indication, by the right surgeon, with the right outcome. Therefore, I will offer surgery only if I believe this to be in the best patients interest. I will explain to my patients all the benefits and risks associated with the surgical procedure and help them to take decision supported by evidences and results. If I think that the procedure needed is not within my surgical territory, I will make sure that patients are referred to right expertise.
